BURKE RETURNS TO WORKHOUSE

Like Proverbial Cat, He Came Back-Is a Mule and a Good Kicker.

"Burke has returned." This shout passed from lip to lip at the City Workhouse yesterday. Burke, unmindful of the comment passed upon his arrival. simply pricked up his cars, switched his tail, and, after a few kicks, trotted off to his stall, which has been vacant since Burke was released from the Workhouse several months ago.

Several months ago Burke was one of the Workhouse quarry mules. Those who had to drive him declared that he was the original beast responsible for the coining of the phrase, "stubborn as a Burke did not like to work. He tried to impress the fact upon his drivers. Several of the impressions he made are on record at the City Hospital.

So frequently did Burke bang his beeis over the dashboard, that Andrew Sulley, the Workhouse superintendent, decided that the mule was too high-bred for quarry depths and Burke was condemned. He was sold for a pittance, and there was great rejoicing at the Workhouse. Thereafter Burke struggled with another mule in collecting city garbage, the Excelsior Hauling and Transfer Company having bought him.

Shortly afterward the city bought the plant and half a hundred mules were condemned. Burke, who was still as unruly as ever, was one of the number. He, with a dozen others, was trotted out for the inspection of Workhouse employes, as six mules were needed for work about that institution.

Burke was selected. He was pronounced the best mule in the lot after being put through all the gaits. When he was put through the Workhouse gate, however, his willing of recognition, and his bee-line for his stall, revived memories of former unpleasantries. At the Supply Commissionar's office they say it is a "horse on" Andy Scully.

TWO YELLOW DOGS MISSING FROM THE IGORROTE CAMP.

Suspicious Transaction Threatens Scandal in Philippine Reservation at World's Fair.

A scandal is brewing in the ranks of high society in the Igorrole colony at the World's Fair grounds. Two dogs are missing!

Last Monday six dogs were imprisoned in the Philippine reservation at the Fair. They were being subjected to a fattening process at the hands of the purchasing Yesterday only four dogs graced the kennel. The two missing dogs were yellow dogs, too. The Igorrote prefers yellow dog for his diet.

While the Government officials are not inclined to question the honesty of any member of the Igorrote tribe, the nature of the case is such as to make the disappearance of the canines a most suspicious transaction.

It is known that the Igorrote has been yearning for a baked dog. It is also known that the members of the World's Fair colony have not tasted toothsome dog meat for over two months. It is admitted by the officials that the barking of the dogs would, in all probability, drive the Igorrotes into fits of desperation. Figuring per a Sherlock Holmes deduction, it would have been the most natural thing for the Igorrote to arise in the still-reas of the night and divest the kennel of its yellow dogs.

Without drawing conclusions, the bare fact remains that two yellow dogs are gone.

Putting two and two together, the men engaged in unraveling this deep mystery of the Igorrote division can make their It is said that at breakfast in the Cuartel SHOCK PROVED FATAL

THIRD APOLLO CLUB CONCERT CLOSES SEASON.

Assistant Postmaster General more severely, but on the ground that he omitted from his report cases in which he knew the laws were being violated by the payment of money.

The remarkably amiable attitude exhibited toward Mr. Bristow, after a period in which nothing was too extreme when applied to him, is generally attributed at Washington to that powerful and protecting influence which shields the favorites of the White House. No other explanation really explains the shift in sentiment. With the Apollo Club's concert last night virtually the concert season of 1903-1934 closed, and closed impressively, though the singing of the club itself was less spirited than upon some other occasions. In Signor Enrico Tramonti, solo harp-In Signor Enrico Tramonti, solo harpist, the club offered a rare attraction. Not in a very, very long time has a harpist of his power played before a St. Louis audience. In the double-force passages the man's fingers seem to be of steel, and he plucks form the strings a volume of sound which brings a new realization of the strength of the instrument. There were moments has night when he really succeeded in filling the Odeon with tone. Ordinarily you lock upon the harp as a vehicle for mere musical delicacies.

There is nothing of the celestial in Tramontis strains. The beautiful feathery effects which other players this season have produced are absent from his playing; but he is sure, and not altogether without sweetness of touch, he is wondrously facile, and he is strong, above all things. It was a dramatic rendition which he gave of Godefroid's "Marchie Triomphale du Roi David," a composition particularly suited to his style of playing, full of heavy crescendo passages and brilliant cadenas, in which he visibly found the greatest delight—as did his audience.

Thomas's "Moise" were lighter selections given admirably enough, but it was the Triumphal March which moved enthusiasm, bringing repeated encores.

Mme, Lillian Blauvelt, however, is rightfully entitled to the honors of the evening. Since her last appearance here her voice has lost not the faintest measure of its capacity, its birdlike softness and gracility; and her singing of the Cavatina. "Una Voce poce fa," from Rossini's "Barber of Seville," must go down in the record of the season as a prime treat. Patti seldom, in her best days—so long, long ago—gave us more marvelous exhibitions of difficult things. Among the selections calling for rare development of technique there are few of more exacting requirement than this Cavatina.

It is a "show piece" which, though adapted to a different range, ranks with the mad scene from "Lucia"; and with it Mme, Blauveit fairly aroused her hearers to high enthuslasm. Patti concededly, of course, possessed—note that ist, the club offered a rare attraction. Not in a very, very long time has a harpist of

"WHITE SHIRT" STRIKE SETTLED. Plumbers Withdraw Demands and

Return to Work.

The so-called "white-shirt" strike among the Alton plumbers has been settled. The settlement has been made by the plumbers withdrawing their demands and going back to work under the conditions that existed prior to April 1.

The demand of the plumbers was issued by the journeymen plumbers to the master plumbers during March. It was to the effect that on and after April 1 the bosses or master plumbers would not be permitted to work with the other plumbers—in short, that their duty should be confined to the work of supervising.

The boss plumber refused to acceed to the demands, and for several days nost of the shops in the city suspended work. The order of the journeyman plumbers was taken before the Alton Trades and Labor Assembly, but it failed to get the indorsemnt of that body. The members of the plumbers' union then decided to work the rest of the year under the old rules.
